More Males Than Pomiles.

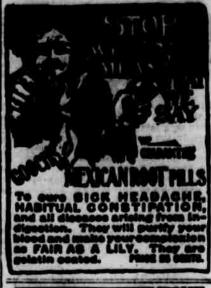

One of the most astonishing disclosures of the census of 1900 is that there are 1,800,000 more males than females in the population of the United States. Put in a more readily appreciable way, this is to say that of every 1,000 of the American people 512 are of the masculine and only 488 of the feminine

This preponderance of the sterner half of mankind has been, it appears, steadily maintained and increased in this country for more than half a century. It is a permanent condition. and as such contrasts sharply with that of Europe, including the United Kingdom, where the females uniformly exceed the males in number. This contrast is, to a large extent, selfexplanatory. Three out of every five European immigrants are men, and their settlement here helps simultaneously to put women and girls in the majority in their native lands and in the minority bere.

The same cause, the larger migration of men, is operating to make women heavily preponderate in our Eastern states, while there is a large surplus of men in the West, particularly the far West. War, which used In matter of J F. Duncan et al. for to be the chief disturber of the balance road, come the petitiouers herein, and of the sexes, has ceased to be so. Mi-
